6 European Nations to Study A Uranium Enrichment Plant

PARIS, Feb. 29 (IHT) -Six European countries have agreed to begin a joint study on the construction of a uranium enrichment plant, the French Atomic Energy Agency announced today.

The six nations-Belgium, Germany, France, Italy, Britain and the Natherlands in the past had not been able to agree on a common atomic energy policy. The new agreement, however, will set up a committee to begin a twoyear study on the economic prospects for a common enriched uranium plant using the gas diffusion system the French hava tavored.

Estimates are that the plant, if the six countries decide to go ahead, would cost around $800 million.

History of Disagreement The agreement puts at least a temporary end to a history of disagreement among the Europeans on atomic energy. France, in the Gaullist years, had refused to participate in any joint program of uranium enrichment. preferring its gas graphite system hurning natural uranium fuel, which was abundant in France and franc area nations. The French believed that enriched uranium reactors would make them dependent on the United States for a supply of enriched uranium France was frozen out of the consortium begun by Britain, Germany and Holland to develop a process using the centrifugal method of enriching uranium. Cooperation was also excluded because the nations could not agree on where an eventual plant would be built in the event they ever agreed on a common system. Last year, however, France, having developed a system of uranium enrichment through gas

LONDON, Peb. 29—Home Secretary Reginald Mauoling and members of Parliament have rejected a statement by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D., Mass., that British troops should get out

Nixon Reassures Congressmen on Status of Taiwan

By Carroll Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (WP).-President Nixon ennounced today, after briefing key legislators on his "journe; for peace" to Coma, that Senate leaders Mike Mansfield and Hugh Scott would visit China at the invitation of Premier Chou En-lai.

While no date has been set for their trip, presidential springerian Ron Ziegler sald. "It will probably be worked out that they will go together." This follow-up journey to Mr. Nixon's historic trip is expected to come later this year. The President reported to congressional leaders and the cabinet on his eight-day visit to China which, he told the nation on his Tokvo Chiefs return last night, opens the way for Sino-American reconciliation without undercutting any ally.

Many senators who heard the President's report this morning later said they had been reassured that the United States was not abandoniug Taiwan, as some critics had charged. But a New York Conservative-Republican, Seo, James L. Buckley, demanded a specific presidential "public statement on Taiwan," that would assert that the Nationalist regime was not udercut by the U.S.-Chi-

Arriving back last night from his visit to China. Mr. Nixon told the nation the "basis for a structure of peace" has been achieved. No "magical formulas" for a resolution of differences were arrived at, he said, but channels of courmunication have been opened and there have been "agreements to reauce the rask of confrontation pointed to the trip as the possible start of a diplomatic chain-reaction favorable to Japan. By prompting the Russians to seek better relations with Japan, he is said to have suggested, the Nixon initiative might also lead Peking, in turn, to seek better relations with Tokyc as a counter to Moscow. Discussing the ottacks from Syria, military spokesmen said the action along a 20-mile section of the occupied Golan Heights resumed late last night and continued sporadically until early morning. Neither damage nor casualtles were reported.

The spokesmen said that the first barrages from Syria yesterday morning had drawn no return fire but that Israeli gunners had shot three times across the cease-fire line in response to three firings against Israeli settlements last night. The spokesmen said Defense Minister Moshe Dayan had visitet front-line positions in the Golan Heights.

The four defendants, in custody since the assassination on the steps of the Sheraton Hotel in Cairo on Nov. 28, jumped up and shouted 'Long live justice" after the three-judge panel announced its decision.

By William Beecher WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (NYT) Defense Department sources disclosed yesterday that two U.S. fighter-bombers, specially equipped to carry nuclear bombs, were removed from Taiwan be-President Nixon'a visit to mainland China.

The planes are usually kept on runway alert at Taiwan in the event of a major emergency in the Far East. Asked whether the planes would be returned, ona senior Pentagon official said: "Nobody can say. Whether any of the Taiwan missions or de-ployments will suddenly change as a result of the trip, we don't

The most potent, but least publicized, element of the U.S. presence on Taiwan is the socalled QRA-or "quick reaction alert" force. The United States does not officially admit that it maintains tactical nuclear weapons, or special units to use them, in the Far East.

But for some years, know-ledgeable sources say, the United States has maintained special QRA forces in Taiwan, in South Kores and in the Philippines.

When the Japanese asked why the United States had not re-stated its commitment to the Taiwan security treaty in the Nixon-Chou communiqué, Mr. Green reportedly replied that the Chinese had not attacked the treaty in their portion of the declaration and the United States, therefore saw no necessity for a reaffirmation of the treaty tie.

Peaceful Settlement

5 o m e Japanese government sources received the impression that the United States links ine reduction of military forces on Taiwan envisaged in the Nixon-Chou statement with progress toward the declared U.S. goal of 'a peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question by the Chinese themselves." Mr. Green pointed out that the reference to possible troop reductions in the statement directly followed the reference to a Peking-Taipel settlement, these sources indicated.

Japanese Apology

TOKYO, Feb. 29 (Reuters).— Japanese government leaders sald today that Japan must apologize to China for past deeds to normalize relations between the two countries.

5 Democrats Extend Curb On Spending

WASHINGTON, Peb. 29 (UPI). Five contenders for the Demo-cratic presidential nomination have agreed to limit campaign spending in non-primary states to 3 cents per registered voter, the party chairman Lawrence F.

Democratic hopefula had been sent a copy of the agreement with an invitation to sign. He indicat-ed, however, that others had declined to sign the agreement covering states holding primaries. Several Democratic candidates have complained of a lack of funds and the party itself is deeply in debt. The latest to complain is Mr. Lindsay, who said in Florida yesterday that his campaign was suffering from "rather serious" money problems that would curtail his advertising plans during the closing days of the Florida primary campaign. That election will be field March 14. The new agreement will limit candidates to a total advertising expenditure of $735,000 for all 26.

News Analysis

An Irrational State Primary Dents Muskie's Normal Poise

By David S. Broder

MANCHESTER, N. H., Feb. 29 (WP) -If Sen. Edmund Muskie's campaign is in as much trouble in New Hampshire as it appears to be, the reason may be that the Maine Democrat has failedas one shrewd observer of the state's politics put it-"to solve the problem of how-a rational man should behave in an irrational situation."

Voter interviews by Washington Post correspondents in the past five days indicate an erosion in the presumed front-runner's strength. It could leave the Maine senator with an embarrassingly low percentage of the vote in the March 7 Democratic primary he has counted on to give his presi-dential campaign a flying start. Lengthy interviews, in the bomes of 75 voters in three wards of Manchester and the towns of Summersworth and Newport, Indicate that Sen. Muskie bas a long way to go to reach his minimal goal of 50 percent of the vote in the five-man Democratic field. In earlier telephone surveys of a larger cross-section of the state's voters, he was credited with 59 to 65 percent.

Sen. Muskie's prime asset throughout his political career has been his reasonableness, and the fact that he conveys a sense of calm, good judgment. Yet the frustrations of this New Hampshire primary have nnnerved him so much that he captured world attention by standing at a weekend rally, choked and weeping, all his years of self-discipline shattered, barely able to voice his outrage at what is happening to him.

The immediate cause of his discomfiture was William Loeb, whose relentlessly petty and personal attacks on politicians have of responsible public officials of both parties here for years. But publisher Loeb is just the symbol of this maddening situation for now like a Gulliver trussed up being nibbled to death by ducks.

Here he is the overwhelming choice of his party's leaders for the nomination and an even bet to defeat President Nixon in the November general election—and ha finds himself struggling somewhat desperately to protect his home base against the likes of

George McGovern, Vance Hartke, Sam Yorty and Wilbur Mills.

Sen. McGovern, of South Dakota, is a serious, capable opponent, who has waged an excellent campaign here, but be has no natural base in New Hampshire, as Sen. Muskie does, and he has only the dimmest chance of being the Democratic presi-dential nominee. The others— Sen. Hartke of Indiana, Mayor Yorty of Los Angeles, Rep. Mills of Arkansas—can be considered presidential candidates only by the most generous of definitions.

Yet Sen. Muskie has been backed into the position-after first resisting-of debating these men next Sunday, as if they were his real opponents for the nomination. And now be is engaged in a nasty exchange with Mr. Loeb, who is not his opponent either.

Calamity Factor

The effect of the Union Leader on the New Hampshire primary is calamitous, not because the newspaper is conservative but because it is narrow-minded and niggling. All issues and personalities are dealt with at the level of pettiness. The President's China trip is discussed as an extravagant expense, as if the United States should determine its foreign policy by the cost of air travel for the White House. Sen. Muskie becomes the object of an absurd front-page charge of anti-French-Canadian bias on the basts of a barely literate letter from an unknown supposed witness to a vaguely described Flor-1da incident. In the foreshortened perspective of the Union Leader, the state's dominant opinion-maker, Sen. Muskie is robbed of his national stature and becomes just another of Mr. Loeb's "hypocritical" politicians undistinguishable from the lot. To dezens of voters interviewed in recent days he is no different from-and may be a little worse than-Vance Hartke or Sam Yorty or Wilbur Mills. It is easy to sympathize with Sen. Muskie'a rage at being trapped in this situation. It is even possible to understand why he allowed himself to weep in frustration at Mr. Loeb's picking un and reprinting as an editorial a nasty old Newsweek item on Mrs. Muskie, even though Sen. Muskie must have known that it is doubtful that most television viewers seeing a grown man standing in a snowstorm, unable to speak, would automatically say to themselves, "That's my kind of President."

What is harder to understand is why Sen. Muskie has not so far done the things that might restore a sense of perspective and even sanity to this New Hampshire contest.

Despite the fact that most of the 60,000 or 70,000 voters in the primary have to have a fierce party loyalty to enroll as Democrats in what has been a heavily Republican state, Sen. Muskie has not yet even fully exploited the argument that he is, by every reckoning, the man who is likeliest to unite the party and return the White House to Democratic

Replies to Charge Of Mining Official

MAN, W. Va., Peb. 29 (UPI).— A mining official's charges of partial state responsibility for the dam collapse which sent a 30foot-high wall of water roaring through the Buffalo Creek Valley were denied yesterday by Gov. Arch Moore.

"Let us get the victims and bury them, then take the time to see if there is some dereliction here' Gov. Moore said after bearing of the charges.

At least 66 persons died in the flood which swept through the valley on Saturday, and state pelice said yesterday that they expected the final toll to be about 100. More than 4,000 persons were left homeless by the flood.
The state police said 285 rest-dents of the valley were unaccounted for, but emphasized that most of them were believed to have survived the flood or were not in the valley at the time.

Erroncous Report

The governor's office last night issued a report saying a group of 30 survivors had been found in a cave, but the report later proved erroneous.

Ben Tudor, assistant superintendent of the Buffalo Mining Co. at Lorado, W. Va., which built the dam about 18 years ago, said yesterday that the firm tried unsuccessfully for a year to get a state permit to drain water from a mile-long settling pool to relieve pressure on the dam.

Mr. Tudor said the requests were rejected by the West Vir-ginia Department of Natural Resources because the drainage would pollute nearby waterways. Gov. Moore denied that the state had ever received such requests. He said he was told by an official of Pittston Mining Co. in New York, parent firm of the Buffalo Mining Co., that "there was never such a request made on the part of the Buffalo Min-ing Co." Gov. Moore declined Gor, Moore declined to identify the Pitiston official.

Mexican delegate Alfonso Garcia Robles, uninhibited by such diplomatic niceties, grasped the nettle in his remarks at the opening and not only called for China's participation but also for "abolition of the unusual practice of cochairmanship and the election of a chairman on an annual or a monthly basis." He said that "as long as the cochairmanship continues there is no chance that France or the People's Republic of China will participate in our work"-a view which the U.S.

Apart from the discussions which have taken place during the Nixon visit to Peking, about which nothing is yet known in Geneva, soundings are known to have been carried out by Pakistan, which sits on the disarrament committee, by Romania, which bas close contacts with Peking, and by Mr. Waldheim, None of these have yet produced anything more than polite Chi-

The best guess bere, therefore, that nothing is likely to bappen for a few months, but that at some point in the not too distent future a definite signal will be sent. It might be a direct and open statement that China is ready to join the talks "under suitable circumstances," or it might be a totally negative ulast that the Geneva committee is a useless institution which must be completely replaced by a new organization-in which case hopes for China's participation would have to be abandoned.

subjects which will be under discussion and negotiation in the months abead are the question of a complete nuclear-test-bau treaty, underground as well as atmospheric, prospects for progress on some form of limitation of chemical weapons such as nerve gas and, finally, the possibility of sorting out areuues of approach to the problem of limiting and controlling conventinal arms. Hopes are not very high in any of these fields.

Bonn Deputy Quits Brandt To Join CDU

BONN, Feb. 29 (AP).—Parlia-mentary Deputy Herbert Hupka 56, today announced his resignation from Chancellor Willy Brandt's Social Democratic party and said he would apply for membership in the opposition Christian Democratic party.

At the same time, opposition leader Rainer Barzel said he would recommend his party's acceptance of Mr. Hupka, thus cutting the ruling coalition's slender majority in the Bundestag, the lower house of parlia-ment, from six to four. The announcement came three days after the Bundestag ended the first of three ratification debates on West Germany's 1970 nonaggression treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland, which form the basis of Mr. Brandt's East-West détente policy.

Mr. Hupka issued a statement expressing "great concern" over the two treaties, which recog-nize World War II German territorial losses.

Division of Germany

"These treaties fix in writing the division of Germany and bury the possibility of reunifying Germany in freedom, while not making freedom more secure," said Mr. Hupka. He is a former ref-ugee from Silesia—now in Poland-and is federal chairman of the Landsmannschaft Schleslen, Silesian refugee organization. Mr. Hupka's defection leaves the ruling coalition of Mr. Brandt's Social Democrats and the smaller Free Democratic party with a combined 250 votes to the opposition Caristian Democrats 246 in the 496-vote Bundestag.

Mr. Hupka's decision to defect from the Social Democrats came after the party leadership ousted him today from the Bundestag's foreign affairs and inner-German affairs committees, he said.

Mr. Hupka's opposition to the crucial treaties was known be-fore his defection and his removal from important Bundestag committees apparently was almed at smoothing the passage of the nonaggression treatles through the same committees.

The Christian Democrats last week vowed to oppose the treaties, which come up for final Bundestag ratification in June.

Failure to ratify the treatles would result in international repercussions.

The Soviet Union has delayed final algoature of last year's Scviet - American - British - French Berlin agreement pending the treaties' ratification, and the Berlin agreement in turn is the Western precondition for staging the Moscow-proposed European security conference.

It was the first time the government's slender majority had been cut since it took power in October, 1968. Last October, however, Social Democrat Deputy Klaus Peter Schultz, representing West Berlin, defected to the Christian Democrats. West Berlin deputies have no vote in parliaswinging back to deep church involvement in this nation's political affairs, as under Pope Pius His successor, Pope John XXIII, disengaged the Vatican and the local episcopacy from Italian politics—and the Christian Democrats lost votes. The new church posture of political militancy found expression today in a statement by the inerarchy on what it termed Italy's present disquiet and malaise. The document painted a gloomy picture of the state of the Italian society and called for a drive to secure "authentic liberty."

"Libertas," Latin for liberty, is the official motto of the Christian Democratic party, the middle-of-the-road movement that since the fall of Fascism has been Italy's strongest political force.

Significance Clear

Pope Paul VI, who was understood to have authorized-if not inspired—today's statement by the Italian hierarchy, seems to regard renewed strong church backing for the Christian Democratic party as indispensable. The party, which has supplied all Italian government chiefs during the last years, has been eroded lately by factional quarrels, tactical deals with the Communist party, corruption and, most recently, inroads by neo-Fascism.

Significantly, the Roman Catbolic Clvic Committees, a movement of laymen, shortly after publication of the hishops' statement today, issued a manifesto urging all Roman Catholics to "renew their confidence in the Christian Democratic party."

In the Matter of Taiwan

The communiqué issued on President Nixon's departure from China has provoked varied, if generally favorable, comment. The issue that has caused the most comment is, of course, Talwan. The government and press there is quite naturally furious about the whole Nixon trip, but its formal reply to the "so-called joint communique" is mostiy a reiteration of its contentions that it, alone, is the valid representative of the Chinese people, that the Peking regime is a threat to the world, that Choo En-laia "five principles" of co-existence are a smokescreen. It also hints that there may be secret arrangements between Messrs. Mao and Nixon. It does not formally contest anything stated in the communiqué.

This is not altogether true of the Old China Hands of American politics. They have expressed donbts that the President gave more than he received in acknowledging that Taiwan is a province of China and that American troops will be withdrawn from the island.

As to the integrity of China-Talwan, that is a well-established principle of American diplomacy, one that is accepted by most of the world and insisted upon by Taipei as well as Peking. There has never been any serious public dispute over whether the tall was part of the dog-it was aimply which part was to do the wagging. This is unfortunate; there is a very good case to he made for Taiwanese independence, but it is not likely to gain a hearing while Mao Tsetung's thought rules mainland China or the Chiang Kai-shek regime is paramount in

The United States, in the communiqué, accepts the principle of a peaceful solution of the Taiwan question "by the Chinese themselves." Therefore, it is prepared to withdraw its forces and military installations from Taiwan "as the tension in the area diminishes." Since the Formosa Strait is a formidable most for both the People's Republic and the Republic of China, this is not likely to affect the situation seriously.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, a conservativa candidate for the Democratic nomination to the presidency, put the problem rather precisely: "It seems that we are doing the withdrawing and they are doing the staying." The senator does not regard this as a good horse trade. But not many Americans consider the indefinite maintenance of massive forces in the Far East as a useful instrument of policy. Withdrawal began in Japan some years ago: It is spreading to Okinawa, Vietnam and now to Taiwan; It is to be hoped for in Korea, And if the United States can leave behind a measure of prosperity and stability (which is true in Japan. South Korea and Talwan) and the area is not wholly barred to the exchanges of culture, information and trade, there will be few complaints, and far less risk and burden than the United States has known thereabout for a generation.

Those intangibles could be the real benefits of Mr. Nixon's horse-trading, and the real gains of American Far Eastern policy. Risks undouhtedly remain, and there are losses that will have to be written off. But it is better to accept those risks and losses than persist within a diplomatic straitjacket that ernment in Italy at a time of mounting economic problems have finally forced the showdown that Italy's democratic leaders have long dreaded-the dissolution of parliament and President Glovanni Leone's call for new elections on May 7, one year ahead of schedule.

The fall of Premier Giulio Andreotti's nine-day-old government Saturday came as no surprise. It had been evident since Premier Colombo's resignation in January that the four center-left democratic parties could not agree on a program that might enable a reshuffled coalition to survive until the tion of the center-left majority or a minority Christian Democratic regime should govern

This will add to the difficulties of reconstructing a center-left government after the elections. Many in the three "lay" parties fear the Christian Democrats will swing rightward in the campaign in an effort to forestall gains now anticipated by the

The premature election will provide a respite from one of Italy's most divisive problems, however. It will force postponement for a year of the referendum organized by militant Catholics to try to repeal Italy's 1970 divorce law. But this bonos will not regular elections in 1972. Cargo: Chrome and Shame

An Argentine ship, the Santos Vega, has been loading 25,000 tons of Rhodesian chrome ore in Portuguese-ruled Mozambique for delivery at New Orleans. When the cargo is landed in this country, it will become the symbol of a deliberate infraction by the United States of the sanctions that were invoked with strong American backing by the UN Secority Council against Rhodesia's white minority government. Thus it will come about that this country, which has probably spoken up more often than any other at Turtle Bay in support of the rule of law in world affairs, will place itself in violation of such law and the UN Charter.

Majoritles in Senate and House wrote in the Military Procurement Act of 1971 an amendment foroidoing the President to continue the UN ban on Rhodesian chrome so iong as the metal was also imported from Russia. Lawmakers argued that this country could not rely on Communist sources for strategic needs; that Russian prices were far higher than Rhodesia's and that the Soviet government was more despotic than the Salisbury regime.

The national defense argument, at least, was fraodulent. The United States has so much chrome in its stockpile that the administration submitted legislation last year to provide for the disposal of 1.3 million tons over three years. The Office of Emergency Preparedness has estimated that the stockpile is 2.2 million tons in excess of any foreseeable strategic need. This country had been importing large quantities of Russian chrome before sanctions, as much as 49 percent of all chrome imports. Yet the administration took no action during the congressional debate either to set the record straight on chrome or to sustain the American commitment to the United Nations.

Bishop Abel Muzorewa, head of the Methodist Church in Rhodesia and a leading spokesman for Phodesla's black majority, told the Security Council recently that the United States should be brought before the world court. Whether that happens or not, it is clear that the Santos Vega will be carrying a large portion of American discredit along with the chrome.

International Opinion

After the Visit

The main importance of the visit probably resides in the fact that Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai have now come out in favor of a pragmatic attitude toward America with a degree of unequivocalness beyond what might have been expected. Admittedly, both are old and not without rivals. But there is little likelihood that their change of course on the foreign policy front will soon suffer a complete reversal, eince it is based not on personalities but on fact: Notably, the fact that China feels that its near Soviet neighbor, as well as enigmatic Japan, are more dangerous than an America which is polling eack from Asia.

Peking Journey: A Bad Trip For Rogers

By Murrey Marder

WASHINGTON.—For the public prestige of Secretary of the William P. Rogers and the department which he heads, last week's historic summit meeting in China was a bad trip.

No American journey received such prolonged international television and newspaper coverage. None was so dependent, as a result, on poblic imagery to project, superficially or accurately, the comparative importance of the participants.

Secretaries of state often are overshadowed by presidents at meetings of chiefs of state. But Secretary Rogers, throughout the week, was also constantly overshadowed by presidential security adviser Henry A. Kissinger-even when Mr. Kissinger was off the television screen.

The public subordination of the secretar; of state is more than a mere matter of competing oneupmanship in the Washington pecking order, Mr. Rogers's parti-cipation in the China summit conference, many State Department officials had hoped, would belp rally the flagging morale of the department and mitigate the skyrocketing prominence of Mr. Kissinger in the shaping of for-

But the omni-January as the President's emissary for a dozen secret meetings with the North Vietnamese in Paris that diplomatically overshadowed the formal talks conducted by the State Department, even though stalemate was the result in both forums.

In addition to many other major assignments, Mr. Kissinger also has a central role in preparations for the President's summit meeting in Moscow in May, which diplomats now confirm is expected to begin about May 22 and might last five days to a week. By unoffic'al Washington standards, Mr. Kissinger's rise long ago passed the point of 'no contest' in private comparisons of Mr. Rogers's and Mr. Kissinger's relative in-

As a result, inside the federal bureaucracy and among foreign dipiomats, keen interest focused on the role that Secretary Rogers would play in the China summit. The great blow to Mr. Rogers's prestige came shortly after the presidential party's arrival in Peking, in the surprise meeting be-tween Chairman Mao Tse-tung and President Nixon.

Also present on the American side was one official, Mr. Kissinger, beaming a proprietary grin.

Paper Tiger Burning Bright

SAIGON.—The U.S. interest in Vietnam is long and confused. On July 19, 1941, President Roosevelt sent a message to the Vichy France: "If Japan was the winner, the Japanese would take over French Indochina, and if the Allies won, we would." Chennault recalled 1945 orders: "The American government was interested in seeing the French forcibly ejected from Indochina."

Roosevelt's conceptions were altered when post-war America Atlantic Treaty in 1949. This relied heavily on France. During the cold war Washington and Paris, by then engaged in Asian conflicts, agreed neither would conclude peace in Korea or Vietnam without the other.

Consequent U.S. policy featured blazing illogic. At the start of the 1950s Britain and France tried to bring the United States into a Southeast Asian alliance, but Secretary of State Dulles refused on the grounds that America should not tie itself to any colonial power in this region. Yet when France had been defeated and no longer had any military streogth bere to contribute, Dulles produced SEATO.

A decade ago we tired of Diem and the corruption and inefficiency that surrounded him. If we did not actively promote the plot that ousted and killed him, we encouraged and permitted it. Washington then shored up the eventual successor government, now led by the increasingly capable Thieu, by sending a massive expeditionary force to thwart Communit efforts to take over.

Primarily because Washington never understood the real meaning of the new Communist technicus of Revolutionary Warfare and falled to comprehend political effects of the first televised conflict, which brought Asian battlefield horrors to American dinner tables, it became impos-sible to fight the kind of war desired by the generals. The U.S. public rebelled. After President Johnson's effort to try and negotiste peace failed to produce results, President Nixon started to bring U.S. forces home under his

Making the Play

It is unlikely that Moscow would ever be able to establish paramount influence in these parts and hold it any longer than its brief moment of glory in Su-karno's Indonesia, But it is making the play and, since gaining immense prestige in India, is pushing hard. It has ascendancy in Hanoi, a voice in Lacs, and has kept its embassy in Lon Nol's Cambodia, spurning the fugitiva Prince Sihanouk as a Chinese puppet.

Peking dislikes this trend even more than Washington which restrains its own enthusiasm for Brezhnev's Oriental doctrine of moving in while the United States and China stare each other down. "Beatrice," with music by Tauno Marttinen, was choreographed by Elsa Sylvestersson, a former ballering of the company and presently its ballet mistress. Facing the formidable problem of making ballet out of Dante's "Divine Comedy." Misa Sylvestersson has very loosely adapted various es. Dante wanders through a Hell populated with realistically frightening creatures, such as mutilated bodies swathed in trailing bandages who writhed in clouds of smoke to somber music from an organ. Eero Huttenen was effective as Lucifer and the sets and special curtains designed by Paul Suominen for the last act-all bright red, gold and bine with astrological symbols—were striking. Nevertheless, this ballet seemed very long and a lot

Brecht's 'Saint Joan' Has Paris Premiere

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss DARIS, Feh. 29 (IHT .- Brecht's "Saint Josz of the Stockyards." written 40 years ago. is having its Parisian premiere "Sainte-Jeanne des Abattoirs" at the Theatre oe l'Est Parisien, 17 Rue Malte-Brun, Paris 20. At a first gulp, It might seem as synthetic as Prohibition gin.

In it are some of the characters and the general argument of Shaw's "Major Barbara": traces of Upton Sinclair's muck-racking novel, "The Jungle," about Chicago meat-packing plants; imitations of grand opera: travestles of the historic tragedies of Goethe and Schiller; and a broad streak of the "Chinatown Charlie" species of Bowery melodrama.

Despite these incongruous ingredients, it is echt Brecht. Brecht, if not in top form, 2t least at his second hest. It has occasional surges of theatrical power with Brecht's social conscience as its dynamo. noswerving drive, his penchant for the grotesque and for crass improbabilities-ail are woven into an "enic" drama form

Joan Dark (Anne Doat) is a Salvation Army lass, pure and simple-minded, who ladles out soup at a charity shelter near the slaughter houses. The wretched lot of the stockyard workers, she learns, is caused by the ruthless manipulations of Pierpont Mauler, the cannedmeat czar, who is locked in flerce battle with his competitors. She seeks him out and—like Saint Joan before the Dauphin-recognizes him despite his attempted disguise. The meat packer is strangely moved by her innocence and tries to show her the wickedness of the poor. What That he shows her, she finds, is the poverty-not the evil-of the dispossessed.

When Joan realizes that the Salvation Army-or "The Black Straw Hats' as Brecht calls the evangelistic organization—is deendent on the people's enemies for financial support she chases the money-changers from the temple. Unlike Shaw's Barbara she does not resign but is brutally expelled. The Communists are trying to force a strike and she hesitantly sides with them. Disapproving of policy of violence, she is reluctant to deliver a letter they have entrusted to her. Her indecision brings about the arrest of the ringleaders, hut she dles a convert to Marxism, muttering its creed as ber words are drowned by the hypocritical hosannas of the Black Hats who are in the process of canonizing her as the saint of the stockyards.

From the "Saint Joan" program, a 1930 work by George Grosz, "The World Belongs to Those Who Get Up Early."

has some high moments of which the Theatre de l'Est production makes the most. The scene of the crisis on the exchange, that in which Mauler bids for cattle against his shouting rivals and bose between him and the wideeyed girl are graphically realized. But the illustrations of the flnancial conniving are absurd and naive and an incipient sentimentality occasionally comes to the fore.

Jacques Alric's Mauler is a magnificent ironic caricature worthy of the Berliner Ensemble at its exacting hest. Sporting a make-up of scarlet patches which gives him the look of a healthy pig, he clowns and pontificates most entertainingly, uttering groans of self-plty for his sins and then, himself again, taking lordly command of his enterprises. Anne Doat acquits herself adorirably as the barassed heroine. role that perodies that of the Victorian maiden.

Theater director Bernard Sobel has dug deep in the trunk of past plays to come up with Heinrich Mann's "Madame Legros," which he is now presenting at his Ensemble Théatral de Gennevilliers 141 Avenue des Gresilions, Gennevilliers, 92, a northwest suburb of Paris'.

The reputation of Beinrich Mann, a notable novelist and noble liberai, has been overshadowed abroad by the fame of his brother, Thomas, but he was a considerable figure in the literary Germany of his day. His 'Professor Unrath' became the film, "The Blue Augel" An ardeot Francophile, he wrote biographies of such diverse Prenchmen as Henry IV and complacent, obedient wife of a hosier who has his shop in the abadow of the Bastille. One day a prisoner tosses a message from a turret to her. He was unjustly condemned 43 years before and is rotting forgotten in a dungeon, Madame Legros takes up his cause. She is so indefatigable that she is granted an audience with Marie-Anjoinette. She wins the prisoner's freedom and is awarded a prize of virtue, though her means of obtaining his pardon, she is aware, have not been abovehoard. A public heroine, acclaimed a saint, she finds her re-adjustment to her hushand and the hearth difficult.

"Madame Legros" centers on the origins of the French Revolution. Madame Legros is the

Mr. Sohel, a Brecht disciple, has trained his company in the alienation approach to parts. There is a unity of dispassionate acting from Suzy Rambaud's Madame Legros to Daniel Deliquiet's conveyance of the timiest bit part Heinrich Mann made a determined effort to turn dramatist, but, as is often the case with celebrated novelists, never quite succeeded. Alfred Kerr, the powerful Berlin critic, exasperated with a Mann play, wrote "What a Night!" which was extracted as an enthusiastic quote on the billboards. "Madame Legros" is his nearest hit as a playwright. It contains several strong scenes—that between the queen and the hosier's wife in the second actand sound writing elsewhere. It is hoped that Mr. Sobel will contiruc to stage other interesting foreign dramas, still unknown

"L'Inconnu que Je Suis" (at the Theatre Montparnasses is a dramatization of an American best reller, "The Me That Nobody Knows," a collection of essays written by adolescents about their secret thoughts and longings. One hopes that the dramatication or the translation or both have been changed in adaptation for the show provides a very depressing view of what young Americans are thinking. Most children have some imagination and originality and often say the unexpected, but in "L'Inconnu que Je Suis" not a single arresting idea is voiced. These teen-agers, apparently thoroughly brainwashed, repeat everything aiready seld again and again, in shouted tirades of hanal abuse, It is too bad for a promising opportunity has been missed. The company, yelling at the top of its lungs over a particularly raucous pop score, strives with energetic good will. Alex Legrand as the assured tot and François Legrand as a black schoolboy succeed in making definite impresslong above the din.

In Quarter, 33.6% in '71 Will Deaf Men Talk at Versailles?

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS, Feb. 29 (IHT).—A three-day meeting of chief executive officers of 110 of the largest corporations in Europe and America opens tomorrow in Versailles.

Sponsored by the Common Market's Union des Industries and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the meeting is officially billed as "designed to explore common problems faced by the American and European business communities,"

The meetings, closed to the press, could be an opportunity for businessmen to thrash out the problems that have buffeted U.S.-EEC relations and arrive at common positions that have aluded official negotiators.

On the other band, they could be a continuation of the dialogua of the deaf, with each side repeating old grievances without hearmg the legitimate complaints of the other. Gaylord Freeman, chairman of First National Bank of Chicago, who will be one of the opening speakers at the conference, previewed his remarks today in meeting with the press. fils comments summarize to a warning that the United States will withdraw into Fortress America, raising the prospect of the world dividing into rival trade blocs, unless the Common Market gives the United States "more significant relief for its agricultural products" (than has been negotiated to date) and "terminates and winds down its proliferation of preferential trade agreements" with non-EEC countries. Mr. Freeman said the United States had won "pretty scarce" trade concessions (on citrus and tobacco exports) from the EEC after the Dec. 18 monetary agreement. Greater concessions had been anticipated in order to help smooth the dollar devaluation bill through Congress.

He went on to say that the high-minded U.S. idealism "born in the period of (Franklin D.) Roosevelt and after, when our wealth was sufficiently great that it was considered limitiess" lives on in the U.S. State Department—which he noted has been absent from recent negotiations. "But the Nixon administration and U.S. business say there has been a change. We are not in a position of inexhaustible funds and have to look oot for ourselves and have to ask for a quid for

OfficialWarns Dow Pierces 925 Mark In Heavy N.Y. Trading

By Terry Robards

Prices withstood a mild freshet of selling this morning, rallied this afternoon and closed with narrow gains in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones industrial average went through the 925 level and closed with a gaio of 3.84 at 923.13 after recouping a deficit of 2.56 recorded at noon.

The trading pace was slow while the market was slipping lower and was heavy during the rally, indicating that the momentum was upward. A total of 20.32 mil-Don shares changed bands, up strongly from 13.2 million yester-

Petroleum issues marched across the tape in force throughout the session and Gulf Oil, the volume leader, traded a massive 829,800 shares. It edged downward 7/8 to close at 28 1/4 after shooting up 2 3 8 yesterday.

The company attracted speculative interest with its announcement that it had developed a process that could extract 30 percent more gasoline from a barrel of crude oil. Gulf has given no indication as to when, or if, the process might have an impact on earnings.

Another factor in the oil outlook was the announcement by Humble Oil & Refining, the largest supplier in this country of heavy industrial fuel oils, of price cuts amounting to 20 to 30 cents a barrel on these products. Standard Oil of New Jersey. Humble's parent, was clipped for a loss of 1 3 8 at 75 1 2. Texaco dropped 7/8 to 33 1/2 and Mobil Eastman Kodak, a firm spot ln

IT&T Alleged To Have 'Fixed' Anti-Trust Case

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (AP-DJ .- Newspaper columnist Jack Anderson says he has evidence that the Nixon administration settled anti-trust cases in favor of International Telephone & Telefinancial support for the Republican National Convention io San Diego, Calif., this summer.

In his column published today, Mr. Anderson said he bad obtained a memo written by ITT lob-byist Dita Beard to W. F. Merriam, ITT vice-president in charge of the Washington office. "The memo, which was intended to be destroyed after it was read, not only indicates that the antitrust cases had been fixed but that the fix was a payoff for ITT's piedge of up to $400.(") for the upcoming Republican convention," Mr. Anderson said. Both John N. Mitchell, who has just resigned as attorney general to manage Mr. Nixon's re-elect on campaign, and ITT issued statements denying any deal had been made over the anti-trust cases or the convention contribution. Last July 31, the Justice Department announced agreeoieut on an out-of-court settlement of three peoding merger cases in-volving ITT plans to acquire Hartford Fire Insurance Co., Grinnell Corp. and Canteen Corp.

Slam contracts are spectacular, but the humble part-se re has adherents too, for it offers many possibilities in the play. An example is the diagramed deal. East opened the bidding with weak no-trump, North made a balancing double and West rescu-ed his side into two diamonds, which would have failed by at least one trick. South tried two spades and the hidding ended. If West had made a passive lead of a diamond, South would have been able to discard a heart loser from his hand on the third round of diamonds, but West instead chose the effective lead of the heart queen, and the defense took the three top honors in that suit.

At the fourth trick East returned a club, in response to a signal by his partner, and the club ace At this point one might think that South was headed for defeat, but he found a way to lose only one trump trick. After a club return from

64 can live off a biscuit and a sunset," Daisy Bates said. and though she did more for the aborigines of Australia than any other single person, a biscuit and a sunset were just about all the tangible reward she got from the government. An Irish-born lady with an upper-class outlook and education, Mrs. Bates was the most unlikely looking anthropoiogist the world has ever seen. Born in 1863, she wore Victorian clothes in and out of the bush all her life long. Receiving the governor and his wife in 1946, she made her curtsy in the same dress she had worn for her presentation in 1901. Yet, as the photographs show, she always looked incredibly chic. In the brush, her veiled straw hat protected her delicate complexion against the flerce flies and mosquitoes; her ubiquitous white-gloves defended her against the contagious diseases of her native

When she arrived in Australia in 1884, the aborigines appeared doomed to extinction, victims of the white man's diseases more than his weapons. Daisy did not know that she had come to save them: She traveled to Australia out of restlessness, because many of her friends had emigrated there during a depression, and because she needed a drier climate if she was not to succumb to tuberculosis as her mother had. Before discovering her vocation, she was married to Jack Bates, a drover—the Australian equivalent of an American cowboy. Though the marriage never worked out well, it was on record-breaking cattledriving trips with Jack that Daisy, the only sidesaddle point rider in history, learned to know and love the country and the natives. Never too fastidious to rub oil into the sores of a venereal patient to record a circumcision rite or examine a hermaphrodite, Daisy was nonetheless offended by Jack's rough-and-ready lovemaking and broke off conjugal relations with him upon learning with some amazement that she was pregnant. After some success as a journalist, she went to live in the bush in a tent, without an escort of any kind. She soon earned the name of Kahbarli, meaning grandmother, and set herself the task of compiling a written record of aboriginal life, legends and languages. Before long, she knew too much: Her direct observations often contradicted the recognized anthropology books, a conflict that was to cripple her lifelong quest for official recognition and support.

When the young anthropologist. A.R. Radcliffe-Brown came to Australia to head an expedition.

Daisy was included, though this was unprecedented, he cause Brown realized that she would be invaluable. Unluckily, as a con-temporary put it, "Daisy was made for Brown's exasperation and he for hers." Ruth Benedict. Hortense Powdermaker and Margaret Mead later described Brown as "impenetrably conceited." He was every bit as individualistic as Daisy, too. He dressed as a Paris "savant" and was pedantic enough even to have thought out the best posture for sleep. When Daisy dutifully submitted her firsthand material to him for editing. Brown likened her mind to "a well stored sewing basket after half a dozen kittens had been playing there undisturbed.*

It was not long before they separated. Years later, et a science congress in Melbourne Brown read a paper and Daisy was asked if she had anything to add. Recognizing his paper as an extract from her manuscript, she said that "Mr. Brown had given her notes so nicely there was no occasion to add to them."

What Daisy wanted above all was to be appointed to the past of official Protector so that she would have both funds and government backing for her work It was never to be: World War I destroyed her original chance and her stubborn honesty and independence saw to it that she never got a second. Everyone recognized her but the government and the ethnologists. She was eulogized in the papers, visited by the Prince of Wales and other dignitaries and given honorary titles, but when she asked for a mere £400 a year to continue her writing and field work, she was grudgingly awarded £2 a week—hardly enough to buy the food she gave to her "family" of aborigines. (Her own family husband and son-had drifted away.) At one period, she hved alone in her tent in the bush for 16 years. At the age of 55, she carried a demented blind man who had run away one and a half miles on her back, using the fireman's carry. Again and again, she rejected the government's offers to publish her papers because it always insisted on having them edited by an "accredited" au-thropologist, and Brown had taught her the dangers of collaboration. It was not until she was in her middle 70s that her principal book—serialized in the Australian papers as "My Natives and I'-was brought out in an edited version and became a European best seller under the title The Passing of the Aborigines." (She was wrong for once: Their number has increased.)

Even this brought her only popular, not official or scientific, standing, but she made the best of it. When a photographer searched her out several years later, she skipped rope on her petch of lawn to show the world that she was still fit for work Half-blind and suffering from 50 years of malnutrition, she died three years later in a private hospital. Her legend was headlined in two hemispheres, but her last book-on aboriginal legends-remained unpublished and her 94 folios in the National Library lay almost as undisturbed as her mortal remains.

Book Traces Hawkins' Struggle

Fight to Lift Ban by NBA

By Dave Anderson NEW YORK, Feb. 29 (NYT). His height made him. At a slender 6-foot-8, Connie Hawkins is now one of the National Basketball Association's all-star forwards. But in retrospect, his height almost destroyed him. His height deprived him of presumably his five most productive seasons because it had influenced his exile by the NBA as an alleged intermediary in the 1961 college basketball scandal. When he was 10 years old, he was 5-10 and 115 pounds. He was taunted as "Long Tall Sally" by other boys. In the schoolrooms of P.S. 3 in the Bedford-Stuyvesant slums of Brooklyn in New York City, even the teachers mocked him. To avoid the humiliation of his height, he withdrew into the shell of a constant truant, And later, when he needed the awareness that an education might have provided, he didn't have it. "Jack Molinas acemed like a nice person, Hawkins reflected. "One time he told me he knew how hard it was for poor kids their first year at college. Ha said if I needed help or money, just let him know. He said he liked me. When the 18-year-old freshman at the University of Iowa needed $200 to cover money he had spent on a good time and Christmas presents instead of college fees, he let Molinas know. Hoping to use Hawkins as a "fixer" the following season, Molinas quickly gave him $200, which Hawkins's brother soon repaid. Hawkins didn't know that Molinas, with his flashy suits and his apparent respectability as an attorney, had been banned by the NBA for betting on games. During the investigation that put Molinas in prison for four years. Hawkins admitted guilt to occurrences, according to later evidence clearing him, that never happened. At the time, be didn't even know what a point-spread was. His ignorance and confusion were understand-

Wolf, an eyewitness. "He slid off the chair and knelt on the floor, his huge hands cupping his face. The eobs were from deep within him-loud, almost agonized. 'Oh thank you. God... oh Jesus, it's over. Thank you, Father, thank you." An Anti-Climax

His success with the Suns is an anti-climax, but the book is not all drama and pathos. Humor often prevails, notably involving Art Heyman, an ABA teammate of Hawkins with the hadn't been permitted to play even two minutes in the NBA as his vast talent wasted. "It's like havin' the water runnin', he said, "and your hands tied so you can't turn it off." But his attorneys, David and Roslyn Litman, turned off the water Perhaps the most poignant moment occurs when Hawkins now aware and wiser, survives Gallantz, the NBA attorney.

It was a blatent political maneuver, coming as it did immediately after Italy had lost, 3-0. in Rome to Hungary, and just before the general elections. The Communist press was making capital out of the "decadence" of Italian football, However, the following November, when Puskas and his fellow Hungarians smashed England's unbeaten home record against foreign teams with a 6-3 victory at Wembley, Italy's performance seemed not as poor. Since then, the ban has been

If the Italian team does well, as in 1970, or had-ly, as in 1966, when North Korea beat it, then the ban will probably stay. If results are mediocre, foreigners may return. A Sidelight

The President sald it did not. Mao said that the hairdresser must be a remarkable practitioner of his craft. In a lifetime of seeking, the chairman added, he had yet to find a hairdresser who could keep silent throughout the nuration of a haircut. They constantly insisted upon informing the chairman of successful wagers they had made upon horses Moreover, he said, they were all George Wallace supporters.

The President said that Mrs. Nixon's hairdresser was a woman. Mao said that despite his great love for the proletariat, which history would amply document, he would naver permit a hairdresser to accompany him on a long journey in a cramped space. "How has the weather been in China this winter?" the President asked.

Mao asked if Mrs. Nixon's hairdresser also cut his-the Presi-

He said he would also bet that Secretary of State Rogers was furious about not being asked hy the President to participate in the present meeting.

Nixon responded that while he had not been given advance notification of the chairman's desire to discuss wagering and would, therefore, have to delay considering the chairman's bets until the National Security Council could meet, he nevertbeless wanted to make one thing perfectly clear. This, the President said, was that Sen. Barry Goldwater was a great American. As for Secretary of State Rogers, he said, the only reason Rogers had not accompanied him to this meeting was quite simple. Rogers had a prior engagement to have his hair cut at this hour.

Mao asked the President if he had seen "Patton." and urged him to do so if he had not.

Nixon replied that he could not divulge classified information, hut, in all candor, he went oo, he wanted to point out to the chairman that the present meeting. which was now ending, was historic, in that it was the first time 2 President of the United States had ever met with a chairman of the Communist party of the Pcople's Republic of China.

Mao accompanied the President to the door and pointed out that this was the first time a chairman of the Communist party of the People's Republic of China had ever accompanied a President of the United States to a door. He asked the President if Mrs. Nixon's hairdresser would be returning to the Volted States.

The President said yes. Mao sald that would be a historic round trlp for hairdressing. The meeting concluded.

A Hundred Years Of Cracker Jacks

By Raymond A. Sokolov

NEW YORK, Feb. 29 (NYT).—Chicago had just burned down when P. W. Rueckheim, a German immigrant, came to the Windy City from a nearby farm with his life savings of $200. He intended to make an honest buck cleaning up the dehris from the 1871 holocaust, but instead opened a popcorn stand. By 1872, having rung certain now sacred changes in his product one doubt exclaiming "Eureka!" or its German equivalent at the moment of discovery) he invented what every loyal American knows and loves as Cracker Jack.

All that was 100 years ago, so the folks at Cracker Jack threw a centennial bash at the Plaza the other day, billed as an "Old Fashioned 4th in Feb."

At his seat near the stage, J. E. (Ed) Fulton took in the proceedings, happy as only the president of a company whose name and logo rank in the top five in the Brand Rating Index. Last year the company said it sold 400 million boxes in 97 percent of the oation's grocery stores, large and small.

A Way of Life

Mr. Fulton, who looks a bit like Mr. Peepers with muscles and a Pucci tle, was also very happy about his firm's new joint venture in Japan. It's only two years old but already is blanketing that country with candied popcorn.

Mr. Pulton eats Cracker Jack every day thut not before giving speeches). He traces this enthusiasm back to his youth in Ottumwa, Iowa, where popcorn was a way of life. He sees Cracker Jack the same way, as an institution, a survival from an older, happier America.

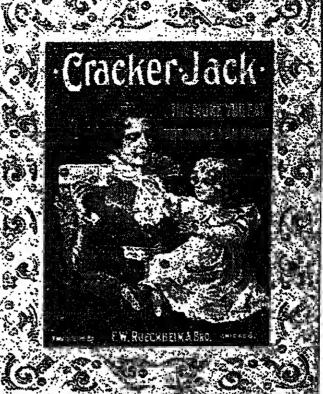

The company is also proud of the fact that through the years it has kept to Rueckheim's original formula. Cracker Jack tastes the same as it did a century ago.

As far as the nutritional value of his product was concerned. Mr. Fulton was unaware of any scientific analysis that had ever been done. But he did remember a nutritional slogan that used to be on Cracker Jack packages in the

"'A good roughage' is how it went," he said, "and I'm interested in hringing it back. A lot of modern people have trouble with irregularity."

Cracker Jack lore is an inexhaustible thesaurus of camp. Take the name of the stuff itself. Back in 1896, a salesman tasted some of the candy-coated kernels and opined: "That's

"So it is," agreed the alcrt F. W. Rueckheim, who promptly trademarked the name along with a slogan he gleaned from a customer: "The more you eat the more you want." The slogan was prophetic. The company continued to expand, eventually diversifying into marshmallows (under the Campfire label). In 1912, in its most brilliant stroke, the world's largest user, then and now, of popcorn started putting a prize in each box,

Prize in Every Box

The famous logo, R sailor boy named Jack and his dog, Bingo, didn't come along until 1916, but the prizes were pure inspiration. At Cracker Jack headquarters in Chicago, there is a closely watched collection of old prizes. They include such items as miniature metal train cars (undated), a Mexi-can handmade doll (1949), a lead rooster (1945) (lead prizes have long since heen discontinued because of Food and Drug Administration regulations) and a host of patriotic prizes from World War II.

Needless to say, Cracker Jack stopped huying prizes from the Japanese during this period. Instead, the company packaged field and emergency rations for the armed forces and powdered eggs for the Allies. In 1943, Cracker Jack received the Army-Navy E for "high achievement in production of materials needed by our armed forces." Sales of miscellaneous products, except for bulk popcorn, were discontinued.

He didn't give exact figures on what the company grosses. As for the future, perhaps the message on a Cracker Jack prize at Ed Fulton's table said it best: "Success is not a destination—it's a journey." Corny? But that's the point.
